Mr. Al. : fled Lewis. Sir, if you will let Andrew C. Butler have one hundred dollars worth of oil cloths, and take back what he cannot sell at the same price he takes them, I will be responsible for what he may sell, August 15, 1836. Ebenezer Freeman. The oil cloths were delivered to Butler, and one point made in the defence was, that the plaintiff had been paid. To prove the payment the defendant introduced one Robinson, who testified, that after Butler returned from peddling out the oil cloths, the witness had a conversation with the plaintiff, who informed him that Butler had done well in carrying out the cloths, and had made enough, reckoning in the cloths brought back, to pay for the load and twenty-five or thirty dollars more; that the cloths he brought back were but a small part of the load; that Butler had made enough to save to himself twenty. five dollars, and desired to take another load; that the plaintiff doubted the propriety of letting him have another load on Freemans order, but concluded to let him have one on certain conditions, and thought that Freeman would suppose himself liable for the second load. The witness on being questioned by the defendant as to the admissions of the plaintiff in that conversation, testified, that he thought the plaintiff told him, Butler had paid him for what cloths he had sold and not brought...
