He loves the outdoor abode of a man in the woods. Careless campers almost universally call him camp robber. He has the good trait of paying frequent visits about camp and picking up odd scraps that drop from the table or are thrown away, a habit which no one can question. If a camper is careless about leaving his meat out in the open or the butter uncovered, the natural conclusion reached by the birds is that this means: Help himself, so it won't go to waste. At Camp Hardesty, on the border of Pamela lake, during the past summer, food was served on a row of thin shakes that were meant for tables, but which might not have been recognized as such by...
