On the other hand Bernard van Orleys style is obvious in the Madrid tapestries and it is therefore very possible that they have been made after his designs, but not after those of the Munich Museum. Max Friedlander as well as Guiffrey are in favor of connecting the Madrid hangings with the name of Bernard van Orley. Other writers approve of it. Nothing, in fact, stands in the way of the attribution, which seems plausible. The Saint Veronica panel points to the same artist. The attribution does not seem presumptuous. In the first place the figure of the Saint with the exception of the somewhat varied facial expression and insignificant changes noticed above is an exact replica of the figure from the Madrid tapestry and as it was woven about the same time it was probably designed by the same artist or in his atelier. Another thing which is quite possible and which we would be rather inclined to presume is that the figure in our panel may have served as a model for the figure in the large Madrid hanging. The second point speaking in favor of the attribution is the background, for we find in it, on a small scale, the same elements as in other tapestries made after authentic cartoons of Bernard van Orley, for example, in the Hunts of Maximilian and in others. The Saint Veronica panel does not depend entirely for its artistic...
