Reviews

This publication might be well worth a read, and much better than other. It really is simplified but excitement inside the 50 % of the book. You will not feel monotony at whenever you want of the time (that's what catalogues are for concerning when you check with me).

Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Fun in a Theatrical Office: A Vaudeville Entertainment Luke Loud is a theatrical agent who has advertised for both professional and amateur vaudeville artists. The applicants perform before him in his office, one applicant coming on as fast as another is dismissed. The curtain does not drop till the end of the performance. The original performance was given very successfully on a lecture platform without any curtain at all. Besides Loud, the office force consists of Bat, office boy, and Clara Vere De Vere, the stenographer. These three are on the stage from their first entrance till end of final sketch. The pianist is also part of the force, and should remain on from his entrance till close, going on with first musical selection. It is more realistic to have piano on the stage, as part of the office furnishings. Further, the performers should address Loud, and act to him. He is seated well front, making this possible. During the times when Loud is seated, he should interestedly look at or listen to the performers. He may occasionally scribble in a note-book, swing about in swivel chair, toy with paper weight, etc., but he must never draw the attention of the audience from the performers to himself. Nor must Bat. Though either may - and should - act funny, the funnier the better, in the few moments elapsing between performances. The original Bat caused much mirth by his walk, and by occasionally chucking the stenographer under the chin, or doing some other fresh trick. Even the way he called out the numbers raised a big laugh, and raised it every time. The stenographer may prink...
